Problem

The music plagiarism problem that won't go away

With hundreds of millions of songs already in existence and over 100 million musicians releasing new tracks daily, the pace of music creation is accelerating—especially with advancements in generative AI. However, musicians and companies striving to avoid plagiarism face a contradiction: they cannot possibly listen to every song before releasing their own.

A solution to this challenge is essential.

Ed Sheeran wins plagiarism lawsuit over his song 'Thinking Out Loud'

Sheeran's team contested the allegations, saying "there are dozens if not hundreds of songs that predate and postdate" Gaye's song, "utilizing the same or similar chord progression." A musicologist retained by the defense says in court documents that the four-chord sequence in question was used in a number of songs before Gaye's hit came out in 1973.
